

Prerequisite:---

Course Description:

The General Penal Code includes the definition of the Penal Code, the objectives of the Penal Code and its relation to other laws, as well as the definition of the principle of legality, the legislative text, the interpretation of the Penal Code and the scope of application of the Penal Code both temporally and in situ. This article deals with the study of the legal rules relating to crimes and their elements, The circumstances of the crime, the reasons for the permissibility, the initiation, the criminal intent and the criminal contribution. As this article defines the crime and the sections of the crime in detail, whether in terms of the severity of the punishment and in terms of the corner In terms of the moral element and then the reasons for justification and the impediments to responsibility and entering the physical element of the crime through the statement elements of the physical element and exposure to initiate through the nature and types of initiation and criminal contribution by indicating the intent of the original actor and partner and the intruder and instigator.